

The Luminous Net

By Joanne Cook Danner

It was a peaceful, sunny day. Pure sparkling white sand appeared along the shore. The water was calm and still. An atmosphere of peace permeated the landscape. A large, luminous net appeared upon the horizon. The net was luminous because it was of a heavenly design, sewn together with threads of mercy and adorned with salvation and deliverance. The luminous net was being transported by doves to a specific location on the shoreline. The peace doves responsible for transporting the luminous net represented the fashioning of the net in secret during a time of peace. The net was preordained to arrive at its destination in the timing of the Lord because he had need for its use. The inhabitants of the earth were basking in the peaceful atmosphere and participating in their lives without a thought that their sense of normalcy would abruptly come to an end. They were unaware that the wine vat of iniquity in the earth was full and overflowing with poison to be spewed and aimed to kill by the cunning asp of death.

The feet of the Lord appeared standing on the shoreline. The luminous net was delivered into his hands by the peace doves. The Lord stood close to the shoreline watching the water while waiting in a pensive, silent stance. Swiftly and without warning, the water became enraged and tumultuous while waves attacked the boundaries of the shoreline in a violent expression of anger. The fullness of iniquity was encroaching upon humanity for its final blow. Four angels appeared upon the horizon. They were holding back even greater cumulative raging waters that were rapidly ascending until the appointed time of judgement when they would also be freed to roar and be loosed upon the earth.

Executed with a focused, deliberate purpose and vision, the Lord thrust the luminous net into the enraged, tumultuous water. With supernatural strength, he began to pull the heavy net filled to overflowing with the catch of the day of the Lord. As the net was pulled closer to the shoreline, there were no fish contained in the net. The net was filled to overflowing with people who were to be recipients of the mercy of God prior to the final outpouring of his judgement. The people in the net were near death. They were spiritually dead and were nearly overcome by the waters of iniquity. They were gasping for breath. Some were unconscious and close to natural death as declared by the outward pale blue color of their flesh.

As the net was pulled closer to the shoreline, a company of trained individuals were standing in rank just behind the Lord waiting for his command. These people were part of a prepared remnant group that would assist with the end-time harvest. While the world was basking in peace, these individuals willingly endured trials and tribulations that would transform their character, thus qualifying and making them ready to be part of this helping remnant of deliverance. In obedience to the command of the Lord, the remnant company fearlessly descended into the enraged, tumultuous water to assist the inhabitants out from the net of bondage to a place of salvation, healing, and deliverance. The remnant company grasped the hands of the netted, entangled souls, released them from the grasp of death, and carried them to a place of safety at the feet of the Lord. While amid the enraged, tumultuous water, the remnant company remained strong, steadfast, and in a state of perfect peace. They continued to remain in a calm state even though the impending final judgement that would bring forth even more raging, violent waters of death remained within the sight of their vision.

Revival and mercy will come before judgement. There will yet be another mighty outpouring of the spirit of God upon the earth. This is the time and season of the outpouring and of the end-time harvest. The Lord admonishes us to be prepared and not to be ignorant of the times and seasons of the Lord that are associated with this last hour (Matt. 24:36-44). The Lord will not execute his plan prior to revealing it to his prophets who will blow the trumpet of warning (Joel 2:1). Hear the call that has gone forth for the gathering of the eagles. The body of Christ is being assembled in designated rank waiting for the command of the lord to go fourth. "And saviors shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the Kingdom shall be the Lord's" (Obad. 1:21).

There is also a bridal call from the heart of the Lord that is going out across the globe for those who will heed the call to come into an intimate relationship with him. I saw in my spirit eye the feet of the Lord in front of the water, he commanded the tumultuous water to calm. A huge wave appeared upon the calm water that could be likened to a Tsunami in the spirit. It was a wave of invitation from the Lord. The wave crashed upon the shore. When it receded, shining gold wedding rings appeared upon the boundary between the water and the shore that were carried to the shore by the spiritual wave that came through the command of the Lord. The Lord watched and waited patiently to see who would heed his invitation to claim a wedding ring from his hand and come into the eternal, spiritual bridal relationship with him.
